Biographical Note

W.H. Mace was born on a farm in Lexington, Indiana in 1852. He graduated from Indiana State Normal School in 1876 and went on to be a teacher then principal until he enrolled at the University of Michigan in 1881, where he received a degree in history while playing rusher for the football team. In 1889 he received his masters degree from Indiana University and in 1897 received his doctorate at the University of Jena in Germany. Mace is the author of many historical works such as "Lincoln, The Man of the People" and "The Story of Old Europe and Young America." Before continuing his education at the University of Michigan he married Julia Ida Dodson, and they were blessed with one child Deirdre Frances in April 1886.
